

For unsupervised domain adaptation, the target domain error can be provably reduced by having a shared input representation that makes the source and target