

Most of the existing subspace clustering (SC) frameworks assume that the noise contaminating the data is generated by an independent and identically distributed