

Object detection in aerial images is an active yet challenging task in computer vision because of the bird's-eye view perspective, the highly complex background