

In this work we address the problem of finding reliable pixel-level correspondences under difficult imaging conditions. We propose an approach where a single c