

Man-made scenes are often densely packed, containing numerous objects, often identical, positioned in close proximity. We show that precise object detection