

Metric learning networks are used to compute image embeddings, which are widely used in many applications such as image retrieval and face recognition. In the