

Conventional video compression approaches use the predictive coding architecture and encode the corresponding motion information and residual information.