

In this paper, we present a method to utilize 2D-2D point matches between images taken during different image conditions to train a convolutional neural network