

Existing human pose estimation approaches often only consider how to improve the model generalisation performance, but putting aside the significant efficiency