

Single-view depth estimation suffers from the problem that a network trained on images from one camera does not generalize to images taken with a different camera.