

Local windows are routinely used in computer vision and almost without exception the center of the window is aligned with the pixels being processed. We show