

Many computer vision challenges require continuous outputs, but tend to be solved by discrete classification. The reason is classification's natural containment v