

Machine learning techniques work best when the data used for training resembles the data used for evaluation. This holds true for learned single-image denoising