Models trained for classification often assume that all testing classes are known while training. As a result, when presented with an unknown class during testing