Most studies in zero-shot learning model the relationship, in the form of a classifier or mapping, between features from images of seen classes and their attribute