We present a deep learning system to infer the posterior distribution of a dense depth map associated with an image, by exploiting sparse range measurements