We present here a method for computational color constancy in which a deep convolutional neural network is trained to detect achromatic pixels in color images