Removing undesirable reflections from a single image captured through a glass window is of practical importance to visual computing systems. Although state-o