Motion has shown to be useful for video understanding, where motion is typically represented by optical flow. However, computing flow from video frames is ver