The standard approach to image instance segmentation is to perform the object detection first, and then segment the object from the detection bounding-box. M